Background

To promote inclusive and participatory planning in local governance to strengthen peoples' participation in decentralization process, the Department of Local Governance and Disaster Management (DLGDM) under the Ministry of Home Affairs successfully organized Community Engagement Platform (CEP) workshops in three batches in March 2025. These workshops were organized under the European Union-funded project titled "Support to Local Governance and Digitalization in Bhutan." The workshops aimed to introduce and operationalize CEPs in 30 Chiwogs under 30 Gewogs spread across 10 Dzongkhags, with the Gewogs selected by the respective Dzongkhag Administrations.

The CEP workshops were conceptualized as a strategic initiative to strengthen community participation in the planning, decision-making, and development processes at the grassroots level. These platforms are intended to serve as one of the institutional mechanisms that bridge the gap between the government and the people, especially in rural areas where community voices often remain underrepresented. Recognizing the importance of community voice, inclusiveness, and shared accountability in local governance, DLGDM initiate these workshops to provide targeted capacity building and hands-on planning tools to local government functionaries of the identified sites.

The key objectives of the CEP workshops were as follows:

- To introduce the concept and significance of Community Engagement Platforms to local government functionaries.
- To promote community-driven and participatory decision-making processes at the chiwog level to strengthen Chiwog Zomdu.
- To develop the capacity of LG officials and elected leaders in using Drongsep Yardrak tools such as seasonal calendars, community scanning, and local area resources matrix.
- To facilitate the formulation of community-level action plan for community development with use of Drongsep Yardrak tools and approach (self-help, mutual help & Public help).
- To integrate the GECDP (Gender, Environment, Climate, Disaster and Poverty) elements into local plans and ensure inclusive planning.
- To prepare LGs to institutionalize CEPs as one of the mechanisms in line with decentralization and good governance policies.

To ensure regional inclusivity and accommodate the number of participants, the training was delivered in three separate batches. The first batch was held in Phuntsholing from March 5 to 8, 2025, the second batch in Punakha from March 12 to 15, and the third batch in Bumthang from 17 to 20 March, 2025. A total of 122 participants including Gups, Mangmis, Gewog Administrative Officers, Agriculture and Livestock Extension Officers, and Tshogpas lead by Dzongkhag Tshogdu Secretaries from the identified Gewogs and Dzongkhags has participated in the CEP formation workshop.

Each workshop was conducted over four days. On Day 1, participants were introduced to the goals and structure of the program. This included an ice-breaking session and a video analysis of challenges in community meetings (Chiwog Zomdu) using the Karma Lhazin video clip. This helped initiate discussions on the gaps in current community engagement practices. This was followed by technical sessions on the Community Participatory Model, the Ringelmann Effect, and the advantages of forming inclusive community platforms under the "One-Umbrella CEP" model. Participants also engaged in a community mapping exercise to understand representation and structure.

On the second day, the training focused on introducing the Drongsep Yardrak approach, also known as Rural Livelihood Improvement (RLI). Participants were given a hands-on experience using different tools that are part of the RLI framework. These tools are meant to support local governments in better understanding and addressing the needs of rural communities. One of the major activities included training on Local Area Potential-Based Planning, which helps identify available local resources using a Resource Matrix Module. In addition, participants were taught how to use the Seasonal Calendar, which shows how activities or needs vary across different times of the year, and Community Scanning, which allows for a quick overview of the community's current situation. These tools are important because they help local leaders and functionaries work closely with the community to identify their main needs, available resources, and existing gaps. This makes it easier to involve local people in decisions that affect their lives and development in the village.

The training sessions were practical and interactive, with participants grouped to practice the tools in settings that resembled real villages. This hands-on method helped them understand how to apply the tools effectively in their own gewogs. The group work encouraged learning, idea sharing, and questions in a supportive environment. By the end, participants felt more confident and capable of involving communities in identifying and addressing local challenges.

On Day 3, the training began with an experience-sharing session from pilot sites that had already implemented the Community Engagement Platform (CEP). Officials from Gozhi and Khebisa Gewogs under Dagana, Gakiling Gewog under Haa, Gaytsha Chiwog under Bumthang, Kengkhar Gewog under Mongar, and Semjong Gewog under Tsirang shared their firsthand experiences. They spoke about the practical challenges they faced while introducing CEP in their communities, such as encouraging community participation, managing time, and coordinating with different stakeholders. At the same time, they also shared their successes, like improved community involvement in planning and better prioritization of local needs. These real-life examples helped participants understand the impact of CEP and gave them confidence and ideas to implement it effectively in their own gewogs.

Participants were trained on how to develop a Community Improvement Plan (CIP) using the RLI tools to improve their community. They also took part in a mock Chiwog Zomdu coordinated by resource person, where they practiced leading meetings, encouraging participation, and ensuring inclusiveness to strengthen Chiwog Zomdu. This hands-on activity improved their skills in facilitating real community discussions in the Chiwog Zomdu. Overall, Day 3 enhanced their ability to support participatory planning and inclusive decision-making at the local level using CEP concept.

On the final day of the training, participants were introduced to the Social Accountability Framework, which highlights the role of community participation in promoting transparency and accountability in governance. The main focus was on helping teams of local government officials develop action plans to establish Community Engagement Platforms (CEPs) in their respective chiwogs. These plans were tailored to reflect local needs and resources while aligning with GECDP (Gender, Environment, Climate, Disaster & Poverty) principles. Participants worked in groups, received guidance from facilitators, and refined their plans through collaborative discussions. Each team presented their final plans during the wrap-up session, which encouraged shared learning and peer feedback. To support implementation, participants were provided with budget proposal guidelines, with DT Secretaries taking the lead in coordinating the proposal submission and implementation of CEP activities at the gewog level.

Facilitation throughout the workshops was delivered by a mix of DLGDM officials and master trainers of existing CEP sites. Their presence and involvement added practical insights and real-world relevance to the workshop discussions. The participatory nature of the workshop ensured that all functionaries gained equal opportunity to interact, share, and contribute.

Looking forward, the Department has directed all local government functionaries who received training to lead the formation of Community Engagement Platforms (CEPs) in their identified chiwogs under respective Gewogs. The LG functionaries are expected to carry out this task based on the action plans they prepared during the CEP workshops in March 2025. The target is to complete the formation of CEPs by May 2025, ensuring that each chiwog adopts participatory planning practices that align with the priorities of the 13th Five Year Plan and upcoming local development initiatives.

To support the successful rollout of CEPs, DLGDM will supply the required training materials and tools for conducting the community-level workshops. Since participants have already gained hands-on experience with CEP approach and tools during their training, they are well-prepared to lead inclusive and meaningful discussions with their communities for the facilitation of the CEP formation. The Department will also release funds based on budget proposals submitted by the Gewogs, with Dzongkhag Tshogdu (DT) Secretaries overseeing the process. To maintain accountability and ensure smooth implementation, DLGDM will provide continuous guidance through follow-up monitoring, mentoring, and technical support. Through this structured support, the Department aims to embed CEPs as a core mechanism for community-driven development and participatory governance across all chiwogs.

One of the key deliverables from the workshop is the formulation of a community-level action plan for each target chiwog. As instructed, the selected action plans must be finalized and submitted to the Department in next financial year for the implementation of community action plans. This will be a crucial phase for the effectiveness of the CEP to bring community together to participate in planning process for their community improvement and model across diverse local contexts in Local Governments.

In conclusion, the CEP workshops have been a significant milestone in strengthening participatory planning and decision-making at the chiwog level. By training local leaders and officials in both concepts and tools, the Department has laid a solid foundation for the institutionalization of CEPs in the country. The feedback from participants was overwhelmingly positive, and there is high enthusiasm among local government functionaries to adopt this model in their communities. Continued mentoring, monitoring, and knowledge-sharing will be essential to ensure the sustainability of the initiative and realize the vision of responsive and inclusive local governance.

Analysis of CEP Workshop Participants Data

Participant Breakdown by Role

The Community Engagement Platform (CEP) Capacity Building Workshop brought together a vibrant mix of local leaders and officials, ensuring that a wide range of voices and experiences were present. The participation included:

Role	Number of Participants	Percentage
Gups	21	17%
Mangmis	8	7%
Gewog Administrative Officers	28	23%
Agriculture and Livestock Extension	21	17%
Tshogpas	34	28%
DT Secretaries	10	8%

Gender Distribution

The gender breakdown of the workshop participants is as follows:

Gender	Number of Participants	Percentage
Male	99	81%
Female	23	19%

Key Observations:

1. Strong Community Engagement

The high turnout of Tshogpas and Gewog Administrative Officers demonstrates the workshop's success in reaching those most directly involved with community members. Their active participation is a promising sign for the effective implementation and sustainability of the Community Engagement Platform at the grassroots level.

2. Progress Toward Gender Inclusion

While the majority of participants were male (81%), the presence of 23 female participants (19%) marks a positive step toward greater gender inclusivity. This growing female representation highlights ongoing efforts to foster a more balanced and inclusive environment for community leadership.

3. Building Capacity for Impact

By engaging a broad spectrum of local government functionaries and extension supervisors, the CEP workshop has laid a strong foundation for collaborative community development. The diverse expertise and perspectives represented at the workshop will enhance the platform's ability to address local needs and priorities effectively.

Conclusion

The CEP Capacity Building Workshop stands out for its broad and inclusive participation, bringing together key LG functionaries. This diverse engagement will be instrumental in driving meaningful community involvement and ensuring the success of the Community Engagement Platform across all levels of local governance.
